NYPD, Other Law Enforcement on Alert After ISIS Threat Resurfaces

(CNN) New York City Police Department and other law enforcement personnel responded to a threat from ISIS after someone re-released a September 2014 message that tells followers to "rise up and kill intelligence officers, police officers, soldiers, and civilians." The threat specifically named the United States, France, Australia and Canada as targets. In an internal memo, NYPD employees were told to "remain alert and consider tactics at all times while on patrol," especially in light of the attacks in France last week.

Kerry Says He'll Fly to France to Show U.S. Solidarity

(The New York Times) Secretary of State John Kerry announced on Monday that he would fly to Paris at the end of the week in a gesture of support for the French government's struggle against terrorism. The visit was added in part to answer criticism that the US had sent only an ambassador, not a higher-ranking official, to a mass rally in Paris on Sunday that drew leaders from 40 countries. When asked about the criticism, Kerry asserted that the charge was misplaced said that "the US has been deeply engaged with France from the moment this horrific event took place."

(AP) On Monday Divers retrieved one black box and located the other underwater from the AirAsia plane that crashed more than two weeks ago. This is a key development that will help investigators unravel what caused the aircraft to plummet into the Java Sea less than halfway into its flight. Nurcahyo Utomo, an investigator at the National Committee for Safety Transportation, said that once the second device is recovered, both boxes will be taken to Jakarta, for analysis and it could take up to two weeks to download their information.

2,000 Feared Killed in 'Deadliest' Boko Haram Attack in Nigeria

(CNN) Officials said Boko Haram militants opened fire on northern Nigerian villages, leaving bodies scattered everywhere and as many as 2,000 people feared dead. Boko Haram has terrorized northern Nigeria regularly since 2009, attacking police, schools, churches and civilians, and bombing government buildings. WEATHER

WEATHER SYNOPSIS BY REGION:

NORTHERN CALIFORNIA AND CENTRAL COASTAL AREAS:

Eureka Weather:

High pressure has begun to build into the area this morning. Any lingering showers will dissipate by midday. This ridge will bring fair weather through midweek. Rain is expected late in the week and the upcoming weekend.

Medford Weather:

Today showers will taper off through the day behind the trough and further into the evening. Overnight offshore flow spreads across to the east side and over the entire region by sunrise. With the addition to low level moisture from the recent precipitation, expect the west side valleys to develop fog once again by Tuesday morning. The upper level ridge builds further into Tuesday night with offshore flow intensifying and temperatures rising at the ridge level. This will strengthen the inversions making valley fog linger longer during the day, especially in the Grants Pass and Roseburg areas. The ridge shifts eastward Wednesday ahead of the next system that should reach the coast Thursday morning. This system should be a much wetter system than the current one.

Reno Weather:

Light showers continue this afternoon. High pressure will return to the Sierra and Western Nevada allowing valley inversions to develop with reduced air quality this week. The next Pacific system should arrive late in the week bringing the potential for snow, rain, and gusty winds for the weekend.

San Francisco Weather:

Dense fog can be expected through some of the forecast area's interior valley locations this morning. High pressure will gradually build over California and will maintain a dry weather pattern through at least the middle of the week. Rain will be a possibility for the end of the week persisting into the weekend.

WEATHER

WEATHER SYNOPSIS BY REGION:

CENTRAL CALIFORNIA AND SOUTHERN SAN JOAQUIN VALLEY

Sacramento Weather:

A few light showers will be possible over the mountains today. Dry weather is expected Tuesday through Thursday with more widespread precipitation possible Friday into next weekend.

Hanford Weather:

Areas of dense fog are expected in the San Joaquin Valley and Kern County Desert this morning. High pressure will gradually build over California maintaining a dry weather pattern for much of the work week. Rain will be a possibility for next weekend.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA:

Los Angeles Weather:

Dry weather is expected today through Friday as surface high pressure builds into the Great Basin and gusty Santa Ana winds develop by midweek. Temperatures will warm to above normal by midweek as well.

Extreme Southwestern California Including Orange, San Diego, Western Riverside and Southwestern San Bernardino Counties:

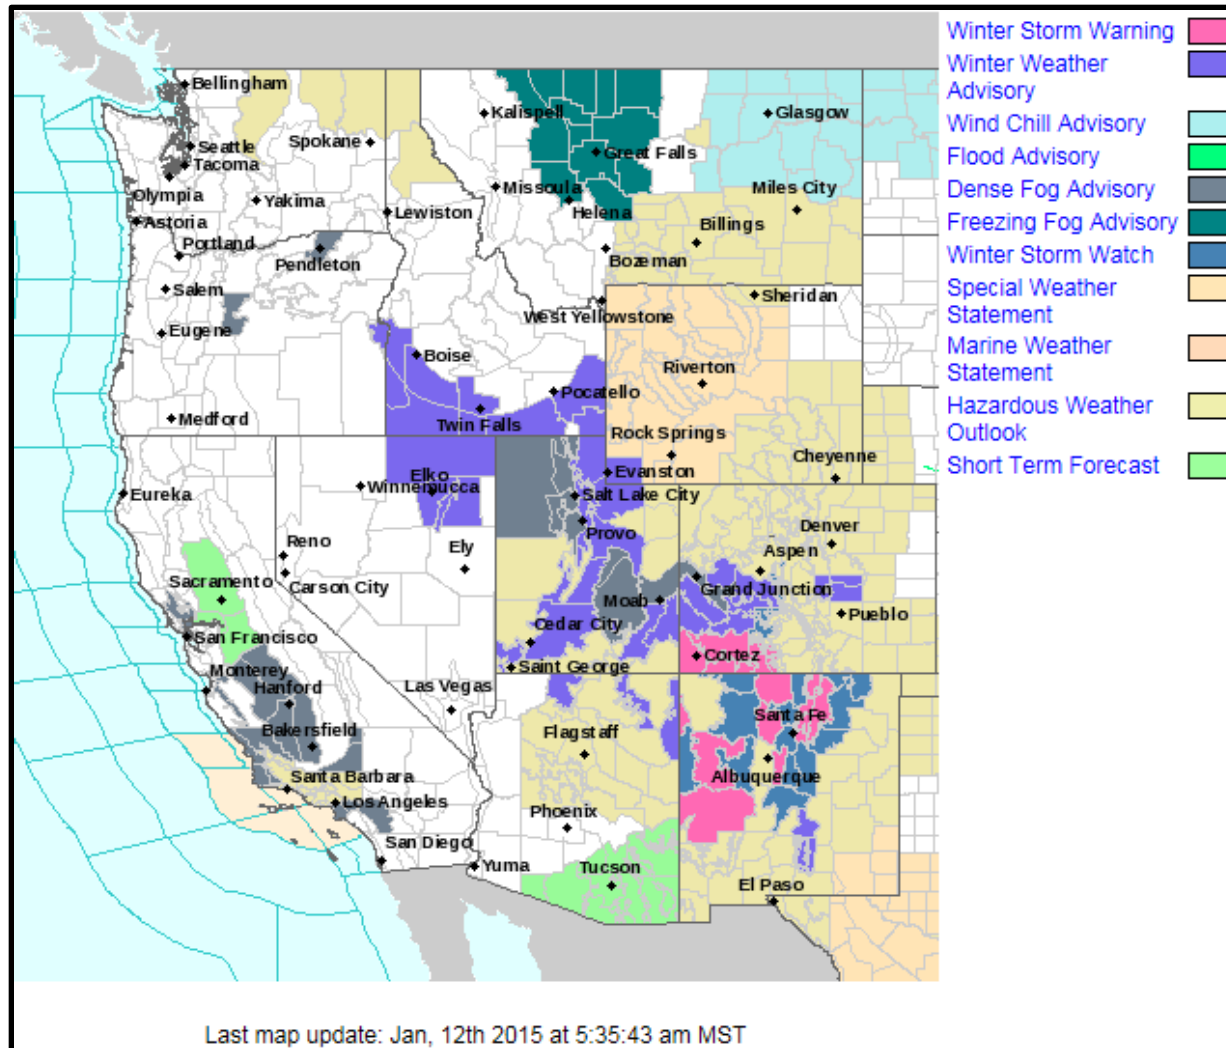

A deep moist layer will bring areas of fog early this morning along with a few light showers, mainly in San Diego County. Offshore flow will develop on Tuesday with gusty northeast winds at times for Tuesday into Friday and the strongest gusts expected on Wednesday. High pressure aloft combined with the offshore flow will bring a warming trend. Next weekend into early next week, high pressure aloft will weaken and the lower level flow will become weakly onshore. This will bring a slow cooling to the forecast area.

Southeast California Weather:

Unsettled weather will continue through the early part of the week as the last two in a series of fast moving disturbances affect the Desert Southwest. Scattered showers will continue across the region through early this morning. High pressure will return to the area by midweek with dry weather and slowly increasing temperatures expected from Wednesday into next weekend.
